Constitution

DEDEAUX FIELD 4.0

I. Team Roster: 15 starters (9 hitters/6 pitchers), 10 reserves, 2 Prospects, 2 DL spots.

II. Pitching - You may start either:
a) 5 starters / 1 reliever (cap of 7 pitching starts for the week)
or
b) 4 starters / 2 relievers (cap of 6 pitching starts for the week)

III. Match Tiebreaker - Win goes to the team with the highest scoring player between the 2 teams. In the case of a starting pitcher who has 2 starts in one week, only the higher point total of the two starts will be used.

IV. Standings tiebreaker (same as last year)
-- Within division:
1. H-2-H record
2. Division Record
3. Total Points
-- Outside division:
1. Total Points
2. H-2-H
3. H-2-H point differential

*If there is any confusion over tiebreaker, total points trumps all.

V. WAIVER WIRE – As of 2011, the waiver wire is automated. The deadline for requests is a hard-deadline of Saturday night 9pm PDT, meaning anything submitted a minute later is pushed to next week.

1) Your budget is what's left over after your draft.
2) Minimum waiver bid remains the same ($1)
3) No buying extra FAAB $'s. What's left over after the draft is all you have.
4) Emergency pickups = $2.

EMERGENCY PICKUPS: If a player is lost AFTER waivers are processed but before the start of the upcoming week - and you have no reserves to fill the starting void, you are allowed an emergency pickup. For no other reason are you allowed a late waiver move. Emergency pickups cost $2

*You can't leave an open roster spot in order to save real money. Example: it's the end of the season, you've been eliminated, you've run out of your FAAB budget - and are unwilling to spend real money on an emergency pickup to fill a roster spot. You must fill that roster spot to remain competitive.

VI. PLAYER ELIGIBILITY:
Hitters: 15 games (from last year or this year) needed to qualify at a position.

Pitchers: play it by ear. Generally, it's in question whether a guy is a starter vs reliever, this will be the guy who's either your 5th starter or 2nd reliever, depending on which you choose. *There aren't minimums for pitcher eligibility, we play it to the best of our knowledge. For example, if a reliever is thrown into the starting rotation for next week, he is now considered a starter.

VII. REGULAR SEASON & PLAYOFFS:

Regular season: 20 games played over 21 weeks (All Star week is off)
Week 22: 2 Wild Card winners face off. Winner becomes 4th playoff team. Starting in '09, 4 playoff teams are re-seeded according to record, the tie-breaker being points. Note: "record" is for regular season record only. For example: if a wild card team goes into the wild card with the same record as a division winner - and wins - their slightly increased win % does not give them a higher seed than the division winner going into the semi-final.
Week 23: 1-week semifinals: #1 vs #4, #2 vs. #3.
Week 24&25 – 2-week World Series / 3rd Place matchup

VIII. PAYOUTS
1st: $1400
2nd: $700
3rd: $350
Total Points: $250
*The season-end award for Most Weeks Won ($100) has been replaced. As of 2014, for every week you are the high point scorer, you get $10 off your league fee. Skins scoring, meaning if there is a score tie at week's end, the two owners don't split $, but the following week becomes $20.

IX. LEAGUE FEE: As of 2014, previous flat fee ($250) is replaced with a sliding scale:
1st pays: $200, 2nd:220, 3rd:230, 4th:250, 5th: 250, 6th: 250, 7th: 250, 8th:260, 9th:270, 10th:280, 11th: 290, Last: 300

X. PAYMENT: You must pay within 2 weeks of season's end (by paypal or check), or you pay a $20 fine for each week you're late. Zero exceptions. Late fees split among money winners.

XI. OFFSEASON VOTES:
If an issue is put up to vote by the league, if it fails to pass, it is ineligible to be put up for vote for the following season.

XII. AUCTION DRAFT:

Budget is $320. Whatever you don't spend at the draft will serve as your waiver budget.

XIII. TRADES:

1. You are required to trade a minimum of $15 worth of contracts prior to deadline, whether that is one trade or multiple. Failure to do so is a fine of future auction dollars ($30)
2. Trades do not affect a player's salary or keeper status.
3. You may include $'s in trades, however "you can only trade the $'s you have". For example: if you pull a trade in-season, you can include $'s from your existing waiver budget, no future $.
4 No trades including money after the All-Star Break.
5 Failure to respond to a trade offer within 7 days, is a fine in auction dollars. ($5)
5. If 3 owners protest a trade, it is put up for a vote, with the 3 person commission being last year's 3 top finishers. If there is a conflict of interest, next finisher (per last year's standings) joins the commission.

XIV. SALARIES FURTHER EXPLAINED:

1) The amount a player goes for in the auction is his salary. Salaries are irrelevant until it's time to determine your keepers. There is NO salary cap, so if you trade for a bunch of high salaried players, "good on you."
2) Salaries and waiver bids are independent of one another. Two examples to illustrate:
a. All undrafted players on the waiver wire have a salary of $5, regardless of your bid amount. (Salary only matters next year when you are deciding whether or not to keep him.)

b. Dropped players retain their salary (site keeps track of this). If you win Alex Rios in the draft for $25, then drop him, his salary will remain $25.

XV. KEEPERS:

1. Submit your keepers/salaries 1 week prior to the draft.

2. You may keep UP TO 3 players, their combined salaries not exceeding $30.

3. Keeper salaries count against the upcoming season's budget.

4. Keepers are for 1 year, at the same exact salary.

TO CLARIFY: 2 years is the absolute longest you can have a player before he returns to the player pool (draft year, keeper year)

XVI. PROSPECT DRAFT

1. At auction's end, there is a two-round snake draft for any prospect who has yet to play in the Majors.
2. If your new prospect promptly starts this MLB season, he is ineligible - and you have to pick another one.
3. You can keep a prospect for unlimited years - until he becomes a major leaguer.
4. A prospect becomes a major leaguer when he plays 1 game in the majors prior to Sept 1st (aka September call-ups).
5. Next season he is a rookie and the last year you can count him as a prospect.
6. After his rookie year, if you want to keep that prospect, he must be one of the 3 MLB players you keep. Otherwise you drop or trade him.
7. Only one of your two prospects can qualify as a rookie – the other (if he qualifies) must be counted as a MLBer.
8. Want different minor leaguers? Only time you can replace them is in next year's prospects draft, if you have an opening or you want to drop one of the two you have.
Using Mike Trout as an example:
2008: Neish takes 17 year old Trout in the prospect draft.
2009: Neish keeps Trout as a prospect.
2010: Neish keeps Trout as a prospect.
2011: Trout is called up in July.
2012: Trout's rookie year (last year he can be kept in 1 of Neish's 2 prospect slots.
2013: Neish presumably declares Trout one of his 3 MLB keepers (at $0). Or he can drop him. Or he can trade him.
2014: Regardless of what Neish does with Trout, Trout is back in the draft.

TO CLARIFY: You may keep UP TO 3 major leaguers for $30 and UP TO 2 prospects.

It's up to you to track your minor leaguer status

Auction dollars/FAAB dollars: Unused auction dollars are your entire waiver budget. Unused waiver dollars go to waste at season's end.

XVII. Divisions: After this season, Top 3 finishers will always pick the divisions.

ARTICLES OF CONFEDERATION (ceased 2013)

I. Team Roster - is allowed a maximum of 22 players, or 24 (if you place players on your dl)
DL limit is 2 injured players.

II. Pitching - You may start either:
a) 5 starters / 1 reliever (cap of 7 pitching starts for the week)
or
b) 4 starters / 2 relievers (cap of 6 pitching starts for the week)

III. Match Tiebreaker - Win goes to the team with the highest scoring player between the 2 teams. In the case of a starting pitcher who has 2 starts in one week, only the higher point total of the two starts will be used.

IV. -Standings tiebreaker (same as last year)
-- Within division:
1. H-2-H record
2. Division Record
3. Total Points
-- Outside division:
1. Total Points
2. H-2-H
3. H-2-H point differential

*If there is any confusion over tiebreaker, total points trumps all.

V - You need a team name, other than your own name, by the first pitch of the season. If not, it's late & the league will choose one for you. The name you ultimately choose will be updated on the Sunday following your submission of the team name.

VI - -Waiver Wire – As of 2011, the waiver wire is automated. The deadline for requests is a hard-deadline of Saturday night 9pm PDT, meaning anything submitted a minute later is pushed to next week. NOTE: The season's first waiver wire will be in Reverse Draft Order.

VII -- 1) Re: waiver wire, as of 2011, our waiver wire is auction style. You have $150 fake dollars to spend on waiver pickups. If you go over your FAAB budget, it'll cost you real money (every dollar over is worth $.50 in real money).
2) You can't leave an open roster spot in order to save real money. Case in point: it's the end of the season, you've been eliminated, you've run out of your FAAB budget - and are unwilling to spend real money on an emergency pickup to fill a roster spot. You must fill that roster spot to remain competitive.

VIII - If an issue is put up to vote by the league, if it fails to pass, it is ineligible to be put up for vote for the following season.

Emergency pickups: If a player is lost AFTER waivers are processed but before the start of the upcoming week - and have no reserves to fill the starting void, you are allowed an emergency pickup. For no other reason are you allowed a late waiver move. Emergency pickups cost $7 (of your $150 budget)

-Player Eligibility:
Hitters: going to play it by the book – 15 games (from last year or this year) needed to qualify at a position,

Pitchers: we play it by ear. Generally, it's in question whether a guy is a starter vs reliever, this will be the guy who's either your 5th starter or 2nd reliever, depending on which you choose. *There aren't minimums for pitcher eligibility, we play it to the best of our knowledge. For example, if a reliever is thrown into the starting rotation for next week, he is now considered a starter.
